So the next morning the enchantress, who was very much astonished, but at the same time felt that she could not break her word, asked him what were the three things he would like to have.

"First, I will have that which is inside that door," pointing to a emphoard; "next the large chest, and thirdly, your arm-chair."

So she opened the door, and there the voing man saw the king's long-lost daugh-ier, looking so beautiful; the chest was full of jewels and costly diamonds. So the young man placed the princess on the chair, underneath which he placed the chest, while he himself stood behind it. That moment they felt themselves litted up; for the chair was an enchanted one, and would the chair was an enchanted one, and would go wherever it was bid.

Oh, I do so wish to go home, sighed the princess.

And in an incredibly short space of time, the young man and the princess slighted at the palace door, but the chair had become a beautiful chariot, drawn by eight milk-white horses. Wondering who it could be, the king and the queen rushed to the door of the p lace, just in time to hand their daughter down from the carriage, dressed in the most beautiful dres, that was ever seen. The beautiful drea, that was ever seen. Then the young man told his history; and the king in his great joy broaded an immense cask of ale which had been brewed when his daughter was born, and which it was only intended to tay when she should be betrothed in marriage.

And so they married, and lived very happing for many a long year.—From Unce of Hee.
